Pantrio keeps pantry stock, package dates and shopping in one app. Checking what is at home before shopping means fewer duplicate purchases and an earlier look at what is due soon.

Dashboard in Pantrio, sample data

What Pantrio does

- Pantry with quantities, units and storage locations; items that are nearly gone are flagged.
- Dates in view: you enter the date from the package. What is due first sits at the top.
- A local reminder at 9:00 the day before a date, if notifications are allowed.
- Barcode scanning with available product details from open databases.
- Shopping lists next to the pantry.
- Widgets and Siri Shortcuts.

Pantrio shows the dates you enter. It does not assess whether food is safe to eat.

Shared Household

New in version 1.2.0. A household shares pantry stock and household shopping lists through iCloud (CloudKit); iCloud sync has to be on in Pantrio. Personal shopping lists stay private. The person who creates the household needs Pantrio Pro; invited people do not need their own Pro. On joining, each person chooses whether to merge their existing data, use only the shared household, or keep both. Changes made offline sync once the device is back online.
